Sands Sydney, Suburban and Country Commercial Directory

The firm of John Sands Ltd (Printers and Stationers) published their directory each year from 1858–59 to 1932–33 (except for 1872, 1874, 1878 and 1881). The household and business information it contains has become a fundamental source for research into Sydney history, especially family history.

Until now the directory has usually been accessed through a microfiche edition made by WF Pascoe Ltd which is available at many public libraries.

The City of Sydney has now obtained a complete digital edition of the directory from WF Pascoe, scanned from the microfiche, and is making it available for public access through this website.

This is the first time a complete set of the Sands Sydney, Suburban

Step back in time

The navigation bar to the left contains the directory volumes grouped in different sections for easy downloading. A table of contents has been provided showing the information in each section to help you locate a specific year and section you might need, for example the Suburban Directory for Alexandria in 1901.

You can also do a keyword search on the directory contents (the whole set, or a specified year or years). We have found the keyword search is more than 98% accurate. We cannot guarantee 100% in all cases because the digital images are based on the microfiche, which was filmed from paper originals of variable print quality.

We welcome feedback from people who use this online Sands directory. We will use the comments we receive to collate information on how it is being used, how useful you are finding it, and what improvements can be made.

Noel Butlin Archives Centre

The Noel Butlin Archives Centre (NBAC) collects business and labour records from Australian companies, trade unions, industry bodies and professional organisations. We are a national organisation interested in material from all states and territories. The NBAC holds the records of large companies such as the Australian Agricultural Company, Burns Philip, CSR Ltd, Dalgety's, Tooth and Company and the Adelaide Steamship Company as well as those of smaller businesses such as pastoral stations. We hold records of federally registered trade unions and their predecessors, and of peak councils such as the Australian Council of Trade Unions (ACTU) and the National Farmers Federation. The records date from the 1820s to the early 21st century and include files, photographs, minutes of meetings, some staff and membership records, maps and plans, and publications such as trade journals and union newsletters. Some material may be closed because it is very recent or the owners' permission may be required before it can be used. acquisition of material is governed by a collecting policy.

The collection supports research on topics such as industrial relations, immigration, working women, indigenous employment, architecture, economic history, family history, social history in Australia and the Pacific, and on particular industries such as agriculture, timber, shipping, mining, brewing, advertising and finance. In addition, the Archives contain the National AIDS Archive Collection, which documents the history of HIV/AIDS education and prevention throughout Australia.

The Noel Butlin Archives collection is divided into the following categories:

Family history sources at the Noel Butlin Archives Centre

An archives of business and labour records may not be an obvious source of information for family history. The records we hold are not primary resources in the same way as birth, death and marriage records – but they can assist in filling in details of your ancestor's life, whether a Newcastle coal miner, a NSW hotel licensee, a waterside worker or a chemist employed in a Queensland sugar mill.

The Noel Butlin Archives Centre holds these records because we collect the records of trade unions, companies, businesses, friendly societies, professional and industry associations, and significant people associated with them.

Trade unions

Trade unions were formed to benefit their members and so needed to keep track of who their members were and whether they were financial. Membership records can be very abbreviated – just a record of payment, but they may also give addresses and place of work. In the late nineteenth and early twentieth century many trade unions ran funeral funds to pay for members' funerals so the date of death may be given.

There are membership records for:

The best source to identify which union is likely to be of interest to you is the Australian Trade Union Archives website www.atua.org.au. It will direct you to the Noel Butlin Archives Centre or any other archives in Australia which holds trade union records.

Having identified the union, trade union newsletters may include details of war service, retirements and deaths, and will give a good background to conditions of work. If your family member was a union official then the minutes of meetings they attended and files about the cases they worked on will provide more detail of their working lives. There are photographs of workplaces such as wharves, factories and mines, and of members taking part in strikes and protests but often individuals are not identified. The Centre's Library holds copies of many published union histories.

Companies and businesses

Companies, large and small, kept records of the employees, especially salary and wage records. If your family member was a manager or white-collar worker with one of the big companies such as CSR Limited, Burns Philp and Company, Dalgety (which merged with New Zealand Loan & Mercantile Ltd), or Elders (which merged with

Mining

UMA holds an extensive range of records related to Australia's mining history. These range from the experiences of the gold rush diggers, through to the growth and influence of the 'Collins House' group of companies during the first half of the twentieth century and on to the development of today's corporate giants.

Real Estate Agencies

UMA holds a number of collections which document the real estate industry both within Melbourne and the surrounding greater Melbourne area from the 1860s through to the 1960s. Primarily the records of estate agents operating during this period, these collections give an insight into this industry and the important role that it played in the development of Melbourne. Many include subdivision maps, sales brochures and newspaper clippings which document the growth of Melbourne and its suburbs as well as recording valuable information on many of the city's houses and buildings of business and industry. Notable collections include:

1. [Re: \[AUS-Tas\] WILLIAM PYERS \(OR, RATHER SAMUEL PYERS\)](#) [1]

Dear Lew and Shamaine, Thank you both for your replies. This is the same man but I don't know whether he was the father of JOHN LILLEY PEARCE or not. Signs point to it not being him, but my JOHN LILLEY PEARCE is proving to be elusive. SAMUEL PYERS and family did live down river from JAMES CULLEN and family at New Norfolk - JAMES CULLEN's daughter, ELIZABETH married JOHN LILLEY PEARCE. SAMUEL PYERS'S daughter, MARY, married GEORGE RAYNER, son of WILLIAM RAYNER and brother of WILLIAM RAYNER JR. WILLIAM RAYNER
